Language choice, volume of speech, eye contact, nonverbal communication, strategies for moving through conflict, posturing behaviors... These all influence our perception of a "good" student. What assumptions do you have about student behavior? How does your bias create inequities for students?

What did you discover when you listened without judgement or made a special connection with a school-aged person?

Other thoughts:

What was your 'a-ha' moment (moment of surprise or new information)?

What was your 'hurt' moment (feeling of discomfort)?

What will you do differently?
